One of this week's nominees is suspected of stabbing their closest partner in the back.

During a conversation in the HoH room, Cory told Adam that Samantha had pointed the finger at him when it came to last week's back-up plan to backdoor her.

"Whatever happens I am not going to hold it against you. It is what it is. It is the best game move for you," said Adam about whether Samantha, his showmance, is evicted or not this week on Cory's HoH.

"At this point of the game it is dangerous to have your name as an option in somebody's head because there are very few numbers that are left," said Cory on the live feeds.

Adam told Cory that he is used to his name being thrown out there. It has been for weeks and weeks.

"You need to be very strategic in the game about who you keep in the game and who you pull close as a lot of people have your name in their mouths," Cory warned.

"I am not going to lie to you. Sam told me that you knew," she said.

"Sam's pitch to me yesterday, she told me that you knew about it, about the backdoor plan," Cory continued claiming Samantha had said it was his idea.

"Chat with her. I figured she would have told you that," said Cory.

"No, she didn't," said an angry Adam leaving the room.

Once he was downstairs Adam confronted Sam in the living room.

"I thought you said you never threw me under the bus to Cory?" he asked.

"When did I say that?" asked Sam back.

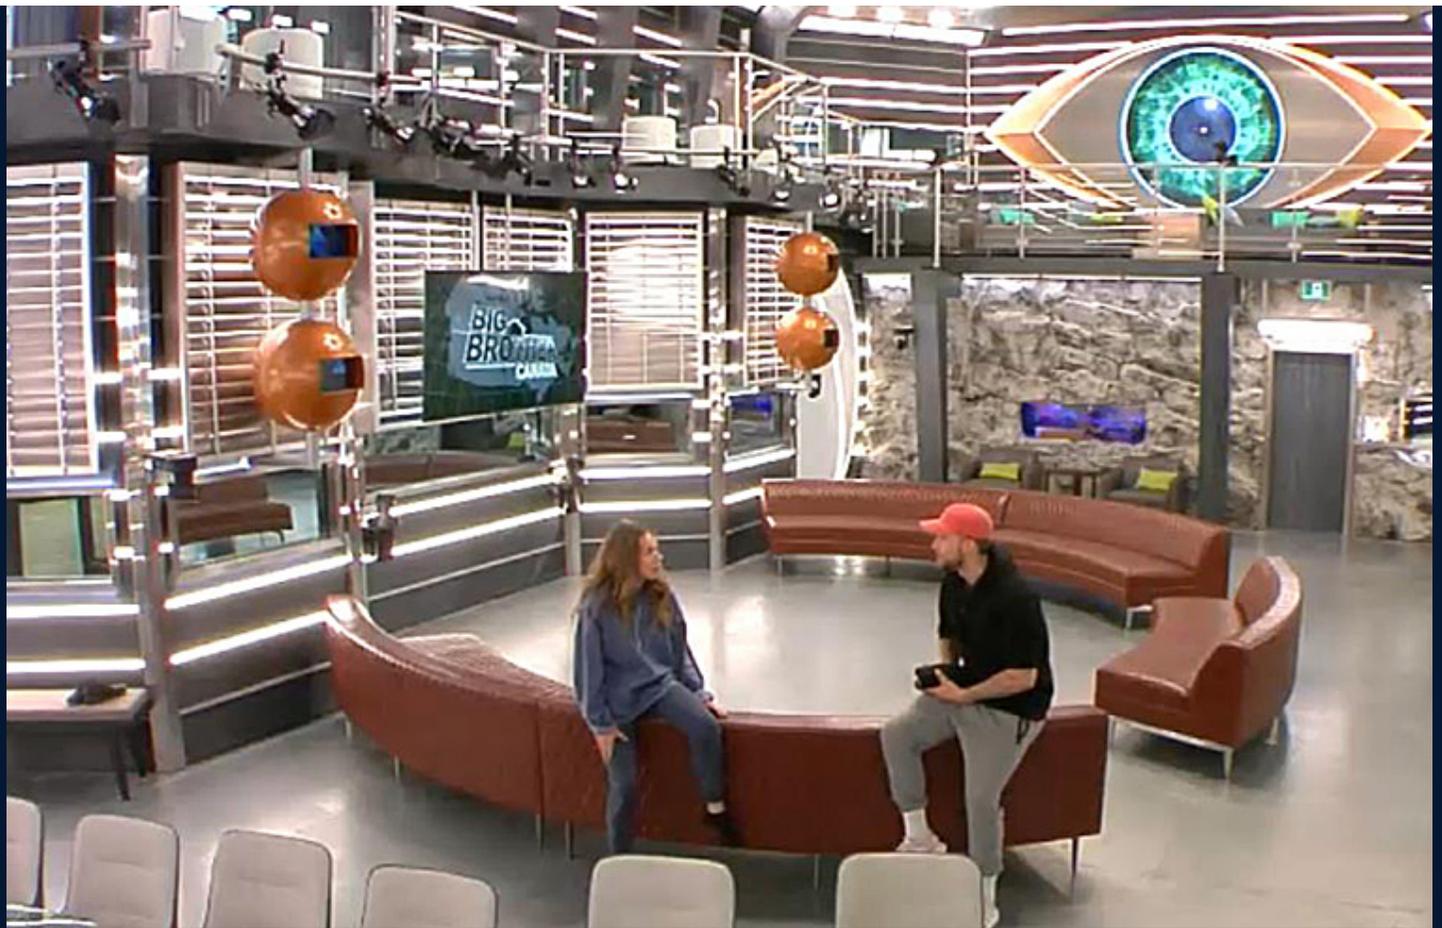

"You told me you had my back and you weren't bringing up my name," said Adam.

"Until the point that I was on the block," corrected Sam.

"You did throw me under the bus and you lied to me," said Adam.

"I didn't lie to you," she said.

"Yes, you did," he said.

When Adam got up to leave Sam asked him if he wanted to speak privately about the issue.

“Nope, I don’t want to chat,” said Adam heading into the kitchen. Sam followed him.

“Throw me under the bus when you are on the block, that’s fine. That is okay Sam, you do what you have to do,” said Adam at the sink.

The couple went into the storage room.

“I am sticking to my f—g word! I didn’t give s—t what everyone else was saying,” said an angry Adam about how he has protected Sam.

“I didn’t tell Cory anything that she didn’t already know,” said Sam.

While leaving the room Adam grabbed his coffee.

“Can you not walk away from me?” pleaded Sam.

Sam went off to speak to Kyra as Adam followed Cory into the storage room.

“She just said she was giving you information you already knew. Is that true?” asked Adam.

“I figured you had a piece in it,” said Cory but that she didn’t know all of the details until Samantha confirmed everything to her in her pitch to stay.

“This f—g house,” cursed Adam.

Either Samantha or Este will be evicted this week.
